

would have heard from him, somehow. He could have become a hero to thousands of young Russians, too, leading them through his God-given gifts to God.

There are many others. Father Feodor was irresistible when arguing over prices with shopkeepers in Rome, or lecturing to groups in London, or talking his Japanese captors in Shanghai into letting him out of internment "to take care of certain matters" (his Russians). He took a keen interest in every Russian man, woman, and child he met, and was charming and genuine and gracious always.

Bishop Romzha was one of the finest men I have ever known. He was murdered by Soviet soldiers on a road in his native Carpatho-Russian land last summer. He was powerful physically, and gentle in disposition, learned and disarmingly simple with people, humble and completely courageous. He had been a bishop for only a few years when Stalin's men put him to death at the age of 36.

There are so many others, Andrei, Sacha, Mario, Pavel, Mavricki, some praying for their friends from heaven, some still active, some lost, perhaps in hiding, possibly in Siberian labor camps. God alone knows where all his generous band of volunteers are today.

Most of them have adjusted themselves successfully, the pastor told me, and only a few expected to find the streets paved with gold.

A new home found, a steady job promised, and that about concludes Michael's story. He paid us one visit, bringing the mother of the family in whose home he is living. A world of wisdom about human beings glows in her expression and she has won Michael's confidence already. Lucky Michael to be living under her roof! As they were leaving she said with a twinkle, "Pretty soon he will find a blonde or brunette and forget me."
